“ Rest In Peace Ahjaneé. We met twice through my manager Ken at a 5K on two different occasions. Ken would tell me how he never runs, but somehow beats my time at both marathons haha. I would hear plenty of stories about him through Ken and that's how I knew of him the most. Still in disbelief about his passing. Goes to show again how you never truly know what someone is going through and how short life is. May your family heal and I will definitely keep you in my prayers. Rest well King.

“ To say we're missing you so much is an understatement. I'm going to miss your smile, laugh and most of all you never wearing matching socks lol. The one thing a parent in the military wants, is for their children to find great friends and we moved here from Hawaii, my sons didnt just get friends but brothers for life. I love you Lemon and you will always have a place in our hearts.

“ Oh Ahjane. I wish there was one or two memories that I could share without feeling like I'm leaving something out. You and the fam were literally more than half of my life. Most of my fondest memories came from the time we all shared together. I make a habit of reminiscing on those memories most days and I cherish every last one of them. I was so, so proud to call you my little brother. I enjoyed watching you grow, even though you were always still a baby to me. I wish we could take one last crazy car ride and play one more kickball game. I wish we could have one more talk and I could give you my advice just to see your reaction, because it was usually unsolicited lol! I miss you and I love you! I love you! I love you!
