Aloma Allenbury Hall was born on July 28, 1946, in Jamaica, West Indies. She was the 2nd of three children, to Sylvia Codlyn-Crooks and 1st child to Isaac McKenzie.

A very bright young lady from an early age, Aloma is a graduate of the Secretarial College in Kingston Jamaica. She sat and passed five General Certificate of Education (GCE) Advanced Level examination and earned distinction in three of the subjects, English, Math, and Bible studies. Aloma had a 12-year career with the St. James Division of Police in Montego Bay. She served in this capacity as a Stenographer. After relocating to the United States, she went on to work as an Administrative Assistant in the tax department at the Bank of New York and retired after 15 years of service. After retirement, she achieved her dream of becoming a business owner. She owned and operated a restaurant known as "Peaches Jamaican Café." As restaurant owner, she was able to provide financially for her family and provided sustenance to many members of the Atlanta community.

Aloma prided herself on being a family woman, and loved her family more than anything, especially her husband, Melbourne Hall of 20 years. Aloma was the doating mother of eight children: Juliet who preceded her in death,

Anthony, Harris, Richard, Paulette, Christopher, Wayne who died as a baby, and Courtney.

In addition to her husband and six children, Aloma is survived by her brother, Patrick Hughes, sister Hazel Reid, 18 grandchildren and 7 great-grandchildren. She also leaves to cherish her memories several close friends and former colleagues that will truly miss her caring and endearing nature. Her life was a blessing, and she is now at complete peace, and will be loved and remembered in our hearts forever.
