“ I found out that Arthur died when I looked him up just now. And reading his obituary, I find myself very conflicted. I knew him from high school where for whatever reason, Arthur decided that he wanted to bully me. He spent the second part of the school year talking about wanting to beat me up. He never did though. I suppose I should see it as an example of his "kindness and unwavering spirit" as opposed to someone picking on someone, they saw as weak to avoid dealing with their own insecurity.

The truth is I wanted I was looking him up because I wanted to write to Arthur and tell him how much I resented him for how treated me. But I also wanted to tell him that I wanted very much to find it in me to forgive him. I suppose that I can't do that now. Honestly, I don't even know if I could have done it if he were still alive.

It is hard for me to feel sadness for his passing. But at the same time, I am trying not to speak or feel ill will towards him either. So I will at the very least say that I hope that his family is able to find comfort as they get through this difficult time.
