“ She fueled my thirst for knowledge. We visited the Wesley Chapel library when I was about 8 or 9 years old and she had already taught me how to use the card catalog. She would normally help me pick books out, but this particular time she encouraged me to pick my own book out. I came back with this big 700 page book called Le Morte D'Arthur, which really was a lot for me to read, but I liked the illustrations. As I'm reading the book over the course of about 3 months, I had a lot of trouble with the vocabulary. "Mom, what's this word mean?" Over and over I kept coming back. Finally, not out of frustration with me, but probably out of approval, she says, "son I got you a gift." A dictionary! She trained me on how to use the dictionary and the questions initially increased. Eventually, the questions lessened.

She had a lot of patience and encouraged me to keep reading. It is most certainly why I am a patient person now. I am definitely my mother's son!

“ She was just such a loving person! She told me time and again, "son, you can never have too many people to love!"

“ I can remember walking into the kitchen at home once when I was about 14yo. She was dancing and singing and just in the best of moods! I knocked on the wall because I didn't want to startle her. I say, " mom you sure can cut the rug!" She replied, "yeah baby! I was born with two good feet!"
