“ My name is Travis Walker. Charles was one of my best friends in high school. I moved to Georgia from New York and i met charles when i was in the 10th grade. When you're a teenager most the times you're around people and you feel the need to fit in. Charles was the only friend i had at that age who didn't make me feel like that at all. At that age i use to get into alot of trouble and hanging with Charles made me just want to chill out and be a regular teenager. We did alot of everything together we'd go to parties, we'd meet up with girls etc. The "friends" who made me feel bad for being myself who i would get into trouble with. I stopped hanging with them The first women i was able to really attract at that age i was with Charles, if it wasn't for his influence just telling me to be myself and just try to be the best me i can i feel i wouldnt have any charisma at all, he would always come in with the assist. That was my guy forreal. Just being dumb teenagers exploring we even got arrested together for walking into an abandon house i was scared and it was a bad time for both of us but when we would talk about it in the future we always would laugh at how scared we were and how dumb we were for doing something like that. I was always into literature and reading Charles use to encourage me to dive into it more. Till this day i am an avid reader. I moved back to NY around 2008 and i haven't been to Georgia since but we kept contact throughout the years and would always talk about hanging out again like the old days. Since then ive wrote for two small newspapers here in New York and i interned for a magazine and i genuinely don't feel like id be in the position im in today if it wasn't for this wonderful soul just telling me to do what i love, and i wish i took the time to do the same for him. Lem was always around and Charles loved Lem more than anything and he would bring him around all the time we wasn't as close but i know he's hurting and if you're able to tell him tell him i said stay strong. His parents were such good people and so accepting. Mr and Mrs Lewis always welcomed me in their home and was so nice and i know they are hurting and i just want to send my love to y'all. Im so sorry that this has happened.
