“My father was a proud father. His favorite story to tell about me, rather it was just a casual conversation or while preaching was about my track days. It was this one race where we had to run a 4x4. That’s a relay race when each team member has to run once around the entire track then pass the Paton to the next person. This particular race, I was last leg which means it’s my responsibility to finish the race. As I prepared to receive the Paton, an opposing team member ran into the back of me and spiked me with her shoes. I instantly fell. Now in track, if a coach or official helps you up, you’re disqualified. As I’m laying on the track in pain, I see an official jogging toward me. I immediately started shaking my head at him. I get up, grab the Paton and start running. Dad’s favorite part is telling everyone how I ran down each girl that was in front of me and crossed the finish line in first place. Even though we had won, all I could think about was getting to my dad. As I limped to the stands toward him, the entire stadium began to stand and applaud me. I was bleeding and in pain but I had to get to daddy. Soon as I reached him, I collapsed in his arms. He said to me “I’m so proud of daddy’s baby. Job well done”.
Daddy, you started your race, you were knocked down along the way but you got back up and kept fighting. As you have crossed that finish line, I imagine you’re walking toward the Father and as you approach Him, the angels are standing, applauding you. God wraps his arms around you and he’s said “I’m so proud of you son. Job well done”. Daddy’s baby is so proud of you. I love you.
