“ It's June 5 2021, and only today I became aware of your transition. I'm devastated and hard to put into words. We spoke last fall - you called me on my birthday - you've been in my daily meditations for years. Yes, you shared with me you had cancer some years ago - We go back to city park together - we maintained a strong bond through many cycles in your life - we spent time in Atlanta together / you were present when I was honored with best short documentary on The Negro Leagues. I've got those pics of us together from the evening, dinner, spending the night and getting me to the airport early the next morning. Brother I love you and will be chatting you up on my late evening walks and chanting your name. God Bless you and I'm sure you'll be lighting up the stage with your prescience. ❤️🙏❤️🙏

“ Family, grieving this one right along with you. He was and will always be 'special'...no one like him. May the love of God comfort and strengthen you in this. I say this also, to the lady in his life and all his friends. Skip, 1976, Germany...you got me by making me laugh...and now by making me cry! We had some times back then in our youth and managed to keep close throughout these years. Though time...life...matured us both, you still remained 'true' to who you were..."Skip". They say, "life goes on", but why at this moment does it feel like...now what!?? :(I will miss you, your pics, your silliness, your kind words, your birthday greetings...the checkups on me. Sweet rest for you Skip...until we meet again in a better place~
