“ Growing up in a large family means inevitably larger-than-life relatives you either admire or fear. When my cousin Joanne came to visit us in Philly, it was always the former. Forever impeccably dressed and so cool she chilled the air around her, but always balanced it with her warm smile. She validated her little cousins by respecting our presence with love, a gentle voice, and lingering hugs. For us, she was our own slice of Hollywood and sitting next to her at dinner was the highest honor. She leaves behind something greater than memories and as important as breathing....a legacy that continues to teach the importance of each second, and the sheer joy of loving life because you only get one.

“ I met Aunt Joan a few years ago when she visited her neice, Loretta Helton for Loretta's bday or should I say spa-day. We all went for massages, and Aunt Joan got a pedicure. I also visited her home with Loretta for a few days. I instantly fell in love with her. Her wardrobe was to die for. We went out to dinner while there and she wore a leather suit which I wish I had taken when I left. I shall greatly miss her presence. Love you, Aunt Joan...until we meet again.
