Marcelina married Lázaro Garcia and had four children Víctor (deceased), Adelina, Sandra and Liliana. She was a dedicated wife, mother, grandmother, great-grandmother, sister, and friend. Marcelina also adopted the name Mache as her grandchildren and those closest to her called her. She always gave love and tenderness to everyone around her and was always identified by her hardworking, genuine, friendly and smiling nature.

Marcelina always showed a great passion for gardening and a love for plants. She was also very fond of embroidering napkins, tablecloths, and especially pillow cases for her grandchildren. She liked to cook for her family, adding that touch of love that so many knew her for.

One of her many virtues was helping people no matter what financial situation she was in. She provided lodging, moral support, food and in many cases she cared for sick people who traveled from the province to hospitals in Mexico City.

Once in the United States, Marcelina continued her good works. She continually sent school supplies, backpacks and clothes for the children in Mexico. She always had a great heart, selflessly supporting those in most need.
