“ Growing up in Ms. with my cousin before they moved to New York was a season in my life that I will never forget. She loved her big cousin Cee and I loved me some Marion. I will never forget the time we were all out playing in the back yard at Mom maes house and a Big Junebug landed on her shirt and I chased her around the yard for about 5 minutes trying to get that bug  off her shirt. She was terrified of bugs!!! We always laughed about it ever time we talked about old times. I am truly going to miss my cousin. She never missed calling me on Fathers Day and I never missed calling her on Mothers Day. I Love you Marion. RIH

“ I remember moving from Galveston Texas to Staten Island New York and moving next door to the Jefferson family. I looked out my window and downstairs was what I thought was the most beautiful thing New York City had to offer. I didn't know at the time the real beauty was inside of her. That family took me in and treated me as one of their own. From Mae and her girls to the little knucklehead boy named Tony who later became like a son to me. All the while I was keeping my eye on the little yellow girl who from time to time would come from around the corner to see her grandmother. We developed a friendship and I also developed one of the most memorable bonds with a guy by the name of Bob Lundy. We rode around the five boroughs in his Cadillac or my truck all the time. It was hard to find one of us without the other. All the while keeping my eye on the little yellow girl. I knew being from Texas I was too slow for the New York woman so I remained content with just watching her from a distance. We did become friends and I loved to watch her laugh and would sometimes go around the corner to see her and her mom who I also became very good friends with. Over time life caused us to go our separate ways, me to Brooklyn then back to Texas and her becoming a Police Officer and then move to Atlanta. All the while keeping in touch through her knucklehead cousin Tony (who told me her middle name was Edith and that is what I began to call her.) After a long separation we reconnected via phone calls and talked a whole whole lot. (There's a joke in there that only she and I will get.) I got caught up on things like she retired from the police force and now had a son named, get ready for this...Bob Lundy. Couldn't be. She chose the Cadillac over the pickup truck. None the less she had a certain happiness in her voice when she talked about Little Bobby that nothing could take the place of. When she would say, "Pop" it was like music. I heard unconditional love. We did our thing at being friends and I will say she was a good one. We talked about everything from books in the Bible (Job was our favorite debate) to Black love on tv shows. She thought George and Weezy Jefferson and I thought Dwayne Wayne and Whitley Gilbert. Good stuff. I really enjoyed our talks. Her knucklehead cousin did everything he could to try and push us together but one or both of us were probably too stubborn. Somethings are meant to be what they are meant to be. I grew to accept that.

Last thing and I am done. On Staten Island, that family would get together and bring all of the family together for different occasions and it was a feast and fun. I feel like if that family could do that on Clove Road with an average budget and limited resources, can you imagine what God can do when one of His children comes home.

Little Bobby, "Pop"

you have no need to worry, your mom is having the celebration of all celebrations up in Heaven. Stay up young man, you come from good DNA. I know them both.

Love and miss you Marion Bryant "Edith."

“ HELLO my name is Diana Velazquez I live in siny where Marion and I worked occasionally. She performed her job well and protected the people and made sure the streets of staten Island were safe. We had fun when we worked together she was very proud of her son Bobby That was her world. she was a good mom ,very nurturing mom as well. The smile she had would light up the room Marion was loved by many and will be missed by all who loved her she is now an Angel in heaven as well an Angel here on earth Rest easy my friend.

Peace

“ Marion was a very special lady who touched many lives in a positive way. Her smile brightened a room. Her laughter was contagious. We worked together in NY and when we could, would shop the high end stores in Manhattan I remember the day she bought her Jackie O Coach sunglasses and wore them while driving the police car in her uniform. The looks we got! Many good and funny memories that will stay with me forever. RIP Marion , my sister in blue
